Before people realized how awesome pictures are. When I asked her why she never posts to Facebook, she says that she only uses it to keep in touch with far-flung family members, like me. Since my niece is closer in age to my son than I am, I asked her if I should make a scrapbook for him, figuring her carefree ways would tell me to be chill about Facebook's overt grab for my child's data. I mostly show off my boy through a shared iCloud photo album, so my special moments stay off social networks altogether. As it stands, the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act says children under the age of 13 shouldn't be on Facebook. Billed as "a new way to organize photos of your child on Facebook," the new scrapbook feature lets parents tag their little ones in photos wherever those pictures end up, like in your mobile uploads album, timeline photos, imported Instagram shots, or even your profile and cover pics.

Pages: [1] 2 3 . Courtesy of Facebook Facebook Profile Page, 2010. But I'm also very judicious about how I share photos of the kid. They're not suggesting users make scrapbooks for their pets, best friends, or spouses. The timeline allows you (or your parents) to trace your life from birth to death. In other words, Facebook has a parent problem — teenagers don't want to hang out where old farts are analyzing Claire's hair on House of Cards. Feedback from parents and teens will guide our approach.. Facebook updated both the newsfeed algorithm and the privacy settings. Update: A Facebook spokesperson says there aren't any plans to automatically transfer all the photos from a scrapbook into a 13 year olds new account.. Courtesy of Facebook Facebook Profile Page, 2008. It's Facebook's policy that children under 13 are not allowed to have an account. This new scrapbook feature is an obvious attempt to nip that issue in the cradle.
